Naya Khang Peak Climbing is a beautiful and adventurous journey in the Langtang region. Located west of the very famous Ganja La Pass, Naya Khang Peak is only 30 km away from Kathmandu, which makes it a quick accessible trip in the Himalayas. Naya Khang Peak Climbing is among the least popular climbing peaks in the Himalayas, which keep it trail away from the crowd. Only a few travelers have scaled this peak. Standing 5,844 meters above the sea level, Naya Khang Peak offers an amazing tranquil journey for those who are looking for holiday.

Naya Khang Peak Climbing can be climbed by anyone with prior trekking experience. This is a very good option to keep in your list if you are someone climbing for the first time or seeking to explore unspoiled parts of the Himalayas. Throughout Naya Khang Peak Climbing, you get to see breathtaking scenery and stunning views of snow-capped Himalayan mountains. As the trail follows Langtang National Park, you will come across diverse flora and fauna. The trail includes many dense forests of rhododendron, oak, juniper, pine, etc.

Likewise, the fine villages along the trail offer you an insight into the living style of locals. People from Tamang and Sherpa communities live in this part of Nepal. The Tamangs are the most famous here because of their unique culture, traditions, languages, and values, which in fact resembles Tibetans. They are believed to be descendants of Tibetans. Similarly, you can see various stupas, mani walls, chortens, and prayer flags on the way. Kyanjin Gumpa is the most significant and ancient monastery in the Langtang region, where you spend a couple of nights for acclimatization.
